Sirs: The more I read about FP&L the more I believe they should be investigated for abuse of their position as South Florida's only provider of power.

They have no regard for the public that they serve, acting like a privately held corporation with no public/civic responsibilities.

They would destroy our skylines and neighborhoods with power lines that do not even serve us, they over-charge with no regard for the public's ability to cope with their need for more profit, and they work hard to preserve a monopoly when the public may very well be served better by breaking up their choke hold on South Florida.

A utility like FP&L should be a non-profit organization as its primary responsibility should not be profit, but public service, and these two goals are mutually exclusive - they look for profits no matter how much pain or quality-of-life reductions they produce.

I think the best thing for South Florida is to break them up into smaller non-profit utilities.
