re: Docket 160021-E1

1. Regardless of the size of the request, simply by filing for a rate increase FPL is sure to be granted one. When has the PSC ever denied a rate hike?
2. As it is, with global warming electrical usage and our monthly bill is higher than ever, and not about to lessen. And where are the promised savings from supposed FPL capital investments in solar energy in our Sunshine state?

3. By requesting a 23% increase FPL is betting on the commission knocking it down to 10% like what was awarded in 2013. Check back to see how much they asked back then and no doubt it will be very close to what FPL wants now.
4. In the following year 2014 FPL was granted another 5% rate increase on top of the 10% giving them 2/3 of what they likely had asked for previously. Based upon past history, it is likely that they'll be back next year in hopes of achieving the same result.
5. With oil and gas selling at historically low prices, FPL is now profiting more than ever in the mark-up of the pass-along price to their customers.
6. Their strategy worked before and that's why they are trying it again. They should have to prove the need for more profit, not just play game of negotiation. Once and for all the PSC ought to allow them just a nominal 1% or 2% increase in an effort to end this continuing charade.
