Hi Eric – the Duke information can be destroyed, and if Tracy agrees for AT&T, so can the misc confidential information that contains both Duke and AT&T information.

Thanks,

Dianne

Good afternoon, Ms. Triplett and Mr. Hatch,

This docket is scheduled to be closed administratively. We have three flash drives with confidential information:

- One labeled "Duke conf." has documents with confidential information submitted by Duke to the FCC
- One labeled "AT&T conf." has documents with confidential information submitted by AT&T to the FCC
- One labeled "misc conf." has a document with confidential information jointly submitted by Duke and AT&T to the FCC, as well as the FCC orders with confidential information in them.

The FCC will likely not want these documents since they no longer have jurisdiction, so please let me know whether to return these to Duke and AT&T or destroy them. If you prefer them to be returned, let me know which company should receive the flash drive labeled "misc conf."

Thank you,

Eric

Hi Eric,

My apologies for my delayed response. I agree with Ms. Triplett. AT&T's information described below can be destroyed, including the miscellaneous joint information.

Let me know if you have any questions or need anything more.

Thanks

Tracy

I sent this message yesterday to another email address (Tracy.Hatch@att.com), so I am sending it again to this address in case it got caught in a spam filter.

I also sent the message to Ms. Triplett at Duke. She responded to me and you using the above email address.

Thank you,

Eric
