Why are the power companies that are mostly a monopoly getting the go ahead on rate hike increases? The people of Florida can no longer foot the bill for these increases as our annual salary only increases 3% every year, but the Electric Company gets a 50% rate hike over 6 years that I've lived in my home. Why don't lower fuel costs ever reflect on the fuel charge? People are falling behind and are starting petitions to keep the lights on at this point! At the same time TECO is requesting double the original deposit amount because people are paying late and can't help it. There needs to be a deep dive into what should be fair and what isn't. TECO is a Canadian owned company that has made record profits, but still needs more from the consumer?? What gives?? Who's calling these shots and why aren't you being audited. Why can't the consumer be involved in the decision?
