Ok. We'll delete it in the orders and go ahead and issue them today.

Thanks.

Well, if no one has complained about us 'vacating' before now, just go with dropping the amendatory.

Beth, I checked back through orders done in the last 2-3 years, and found that we've issued orders vacating that come both from a vote and from trying to correct the situation these orders are correcting--but of course just because we've done it that way doesn't mean it's right, esp. with a strict reading of the APM.

If we are going to title them "amendatory", would we want to use "amend" or some variation of that word in the ordering paragraph?

Kay

Hi, Kay. That was me that stuck that in there. I guess I was looking at it from the perspective that usually, it is the Commission that "vacates" orders, while we are technically only authorized to issue amendatory orders. In my mind, this was a way to ensure that we complied with the APM...in other words, we are issuing an amendatory order that vacates the underlying consummating order, because it was erroneously issued due to scrivener's error. I guess I don't feel strongly about this point, I just didn't want to give any appearance that we were exceeding our delegated authority, not that I think we are. If you prefer to remove Amendatory, I'll be o.k. with it.

Dovie, on these orders vacating, the title of each includes "amendatory" but I'm thinking that word wouldn't be appropriate here, since the order doesn't amend, it vacates. Do you agree? May we delete the word "amendatory" in the order titles?

Kay
