Public Service Commission

FPL has not maintained the nuclear reactor it already has, resulting in an underground plume of saltwater laced with ammonia, phosphorus, nitrogen and tritium that has been steadily approaching the Florida Keys only aquifer and Biscayne Bay for decades. The plume is now 10 miles away and the State of Florida recently ordered FPL to fix the problems. FPL denies wrong doing and is challenging a US Court ruling that says they cannot dismiss the Clean Water Act lawsuit being brought against it by the Southern Alliance for Clean Energy and Tropical Audubon Society. Do not allow them to up in another reactor until they fix what they have...

Dear Sir or Madam:

I believe that cleaning up Turkey Point is part of the cost of doing business for Florida Power & Light (FPL).

FPL is very profitable and I see no reason that taxpayers should shoulder their expenses.

Please do not allow them to pass their costs of doing business to taxpayers.

Thank you.

Yours truly,

Jolyon (Jon) P. King
