It's important that we create a system which gives Floridians choices for how to power their homes or businesses. One of the issues we have is that solar power cannot fairly compete with the power companies. We obtained a quote on our home of 30k plus for solar. We could not pay that back with our electric bill in at least 10 years or more. By then the system would likely need maintenance and repair.

Net metering is required. We also need other choices for power.

The state created solar incentives for those interested in putting solar systems on their homes but they made receiving them a lottery. I have heard of those that received it and are not using it. Why not make it so that users that are getting solar installed, are eligible for them and when the money runs out it runs out. This would ensure that everyone that gets the grant uses it and if they don't it goes to the next person.
